

But as the three-fold singularity of understanding there are three moments at which the singular face stands over and lies under itself ~ three moments of under-standing. If the basic criterion for a viable singularity is that it can com-prehend itself as a universe of real objects of which all the constituents are also the constituents of all other real objects, then the three-fold singularity of understanding must be the least possible configuration with a meaningful future. The reason for saying this is that all other possible foldings of the singularity, 4~fold, 5~fold, 6~fold..... ∞ can be configured by 3~fold.

But these are not issues that Celt deliberates over. Rather she senses them intuitively as the presence of her soul in the things around her, and it is this which makes Celtic thinking critically important to our environmental situation in the 21st century. Celt knows that what she must do now, is to make an adornment that would have far-reaching symbolic strength for her people. She is the first to have had insight into the meaning of the raindrops on the pool. Her instinct tells her that water is the singularity of the soul, and that every thing ~ especially living things ~ a ripple ringing in its surface on a golden morning...
